We're still on this 'event full' weekend matter. On Saturday Evening, I attended an art exhibition at the 'Art Twenty One' gallery in Eko Hotel and Suites, VI. It was a beautiful one. The artworks were so inspiring. If I've ever learnt anything from art, it would be to have confidence in my own form of expression and not to look at others for validation or approval. Artworks, though some are seemingly alike, yet they are so different and beautiful which gives it a form of independence.

Elsewhere is an exhibition which explores the relationship between history, memory, and the creation of new imagination, ranging from material manifestations of the afterlife to fake artifacts, cultural reconfigurations and performative inventions.

This collection from Paa Joe and Jacob Tetteh-Ashong is quite noteworthy. They both are some of the best coffin makers in Ghana. In Ghana, people are usually buried in coffins made in the design what they loved most or what they were most known for. Interesting right?, So if you love to drink coke, you would be buried in a coke bottle, if you are a writer, you would be buried in a book.
